

SNARED A BEAR SUPRENOVA

City Man's Trap Worked, and There Was Lots of Excitement.

HEMLOCK, HEERIMAN COUNTY, N. Y., October 26.—The coming of the snow to these people is like the arrival of a king on the throne of a nation. The farming community here denotes the end of the harvest season, the crowding of spruce and hemlock and birch logs, the mill pond of Mr. Odit is the place the harvest is stored. Mr. Odit, becoming the saw-mill, serves the postmaster and runs a general store, the farmers have rolled their logs to his place, they generally stop at the mill to buy supplies and smoke a pipe of peace, behind the saw-mill is a "Well, I never did, either, only once. You remember when I lived up the other side of Ed Wilkinson's in that log house on side of the road? Yes? Well, I to get city folks there every summer, came for fresh air and trout. It was of those city folks that did the snaring." Do you mean to say he caught a bear in here?" asked Postmaster Odie.

That's what I do," said Vint. "It's at five years ago last spring. That w came from Utica, bringing nine ks full of stuff along to try experiments, as he said. One experiment was the snare. I told him it wouldn't work, he smiled as if he couldn't help being sad at my loss and he said, 'I'll

He asked me where a likely place for rs could be found, and I told him about t of swamp back of the house a mile or an old trail running out there, and so it just the place for a stranger. So he went to his trunk and got out a coil of stout wire, strong enough to hold up a ton a six-foot piece of stout manilla rope a bottle of fish oil. Then we went to harp, where he cut off a six foot slab bored a two-inch hole in the middle. Then, taking a dozen spikes or so, and an axe, he cut the wire and rope, and a chunk of iron sweetened with the fish oil for bait, started into the woods. Near the swamp he found a big birch, with the roots spread out in all directions, and a stout sapling nearby by it. The city chap spiked the snag, bending aside down, across the roots, so that the augur hole was almost plumb. Then he tied a knot in an end of the rope, and another a foot or so up, and fastened the end of the wire good and strong.

and the rope above the second knot. The rest of the wire he formed into a first-class, three-foot noose. He then put a knot on the end of the rope down through the hole in the slab, and stuck a peg that fitted pretty tight up in between it and, of course, nothing could pull the rope up through the slab until the peg popped out or the knot gave way. To the

he fastened the bait, and then set the use so anything getting the bait would ire to step through the noose, or at least its head through. The next thing was bend down a stout sapling after trim-ing off the branches, and make the top tight to the end of the rope. We had to work pretty hard to get the sapling fast to the rope, but when it was done we had the greatest snare set I ever saw before, or since.
 The bear had to go to was to grab the bacon

"It worked, did it?" said the Postmaster. "It did, it did; but I don't set any more res for such animals. The city chap was bright and early next day to go out and look at the snare, and I don't mind saying was a little curious about it myself. We our guns, without waiting for breakfast. The first shot was a dud. The second got within twenty-five rods or so, westered and missed, and, sure enough, there was a ripple of smoke around that snare. I followed the city chap, who was for rushing in and shooting the first animal that came within, as luck would have it, right in the jaws. The brush was pretty thick and got up within about twelve rods of the place before the animal was seen. He was enough of an old hand here to expect to find a sign as anything we had hoped to find: in fact, he said, no sapling we could get our hands on was so straight as to be clear of the ground. She was standing her hind legs, with her nose and paws in air, and turning and waiting about in a vicious way while she just made the most of her time.

"I was so astonished that I could not talk, but the other fellow took off his hat, said:

"Well up! but didn't I tell you so?"

"Gosh! I had been astonished before he more so after he shouted. That old,

DO NOT

Let that cold of yours run on. You think it is a light thing. But it may run into catarrh. Or into pneumonia. Or consumption.

Catarrh is disgusting. Pneumonia is dangerous. Consumption is death itself. The breathing apparatus must be kept healthy and clear of all obstructions and offensive matter. Otherwise there is trouble ahead.

All the diseases of these parts, head, nose, throat, bronchial tubes and lungs, can be delightfully and entirely cured by the use of Boschee's German Syrup. If you don't know this already, thousands and thousands of people can tell you. They have been cured by it, and know how it is themselves. Bottle only 75 cents. Ask any druggist.

LIME LAKE.

From Our Own Correspondent.
The Rathbun Company's saw mill commenced saving on Tuesday morning. The manager of the Rathbun Company's saw mill has a gang of men and teams cutting and hauling heavy logs from the premises of Mr. Lattimore, 3rd concession, which makes quite a stir in this section.
Mr. Williams and his team are hauling shingles from Mr. Wood's mill to Tamworth, having completed the hauling of lumber to Belleville for Mr. Jennings.
Mr. Demory paid his visit last week. Call again.
Mr. Denison has returned from Robin.

LONSDALE.

From Our Own Correspondent.
On Friday, Feb. 3rd, Mr. Murray, wife of Patrick Murray, of the fourth concession of Tweed, who has been for several months gradually sinking, passed away to the spirit world. The funeral was largely attended at the R. C. Church, Marysville, on Sunday last.
Mr. Robert Winters, of Lonsdale, having been for a year and a half blind, after trying to get relief from different professors in Ontario with little improvement, left on Monday evening for Montreal to consult the most skillful oculists in that city expecting to stop until cured if encouragement is given him. We join with his many friends in much sympathy for him in his very severe affliction and wish him a speedy cure and return to his home.
On Wednesday, Mr. Norman Whitehead, of Lonsdale, and Miss Elizabeth McCullough, daughter of Mr. Wm. McCullough, near Kingsford, were united in marriage. May prosperity and happiness attend them through the journey of life.
Another couple are expected to be made happy soon, don't be too slow, delays are dangerous and sometimes cause unhappiness for life, friend J.

GREEN POINT.

From Our Own Correspondent.
The present week has been an eventful one for this neighborhood.

Mr. Thomas Carman, an old and highly respected resident, died on Monday at 6:30 p.m. Funeral at Mr. Carman's Thursday. The remains were placed in the vault at Pictou.

Lewis Head and family have moved west. The milk drawer of the plain, Mr. R. C. was made happy and sad all in the space of about thirty hours. On Sunday morning his wife presented him with a fine young daughter. On Tuesday it was consigned to the tomb.

Mr. Fralick, wife and family, of Morvia, were the guests of Mr. R. Carman a couple of days this week. Also T. S. Carman and wife, of Belleville, paid a visit to his mother. Miss Cadman, of Belleville, is visiting at her sister's, Mrs. D. Chatham's.

Mrs. Philip Roblin has returned from a few weeks visit to friends in Chatham and other points west.

Robert Roblin was taken back to the Kingsford asylum.

Last but not least in the eyes of some of the young ladies was the visit of the two young men from Shannville. As the visits are frequent your correspondent would not wish to be personal or cousin Samuel might blush.

TYNDINAGUA RESERVE.

From Our Own Correspondent.
In the item last week in which the names of the elected Chiefs are referred to, an important omission was made. The five bear names of Old Tychinagua: Satoriy, Isaac and Jacob, patriarchs; Sanson, famed for his strength; Solomon, for his wisdom; and a prophet of melancholy turn of mind, who foretold difficulties for his people long before they came. Now we have five; last week but four names were given.

We are pleased to learn that Mr. Simon Loft has again gone into the employ of the Rathbun Co. Holl on Sim "a rolling stone gathers no moss."

John A. Left returned from his trip to the west on Sunday the 29th January, quite recovered from his late serious illness.

After the failure of his nuptial operations referred to some months since there was a temporary lull, but again there is reported to be a find on "Eagles Nest," and diligent digging with a prospect of samples being exhibited at the American Bi-Centennial in 1876.

There is a noisy place west of the bridge on the bay shore road which requires the attention of the police.

Thomas Blanchard's heat cow recently committed suicide by deliberately walking into a large hole which had been cut in the ice for fishing purposes.

A wool bee assembled at the Parsonage on Wednesday yielding a plentiful supply of food. Such marks of kindness exhibit a friendly feeling between Pastor and people.

KINGSFORD.

From Our Own Correspondent.
Mr. & Mrs. James Blate and family were visiting at Campbellford and returned home on Wednesday.

Miss Isabelle Jordan, youngest daughter of Mr. Michael Jordan, 8th con. Richmond, died on Sunday evening after a long and painful illness. The funeral took place on Tuesday at the Catholic Church Cemetery, Napanee. Mr. Jordan still continues in poor health.

Mr. Robert Adams and wife, of Deseronto, were visiting here last Sunday.

Miss Johanna Garrett, of Centreville, who has been visiting here, Mr. & Mrs. McHenry, for some time, returned home on Saturday.

Mr. George our teacher has been ill and there was no school last week.

Mr. & Mrs. Francis Brennan, of Napanee, were visiting their relatives here last week.

Mr. Thomas Gordon is rushing business at the Grist Mill. A large number of logs are being drawn to the saw mill.

Next Wednesday, 15th inst., will be the first day of Lent. Our school friends had better hurry up and get married before then.

The 2nd inst. was Candlemas day and was a fine bright day. As shadowing to the old adage the bear saw his shadow and will have an early spring.

We have had a good deal of snow during the past week and the roads are heavy. Some of the concession roads are badly drifted.

Some of our farmers who did not sell their barley in the fall have been offered 75 and 76 cents and are now selling.

READ.

From Our Own Correspondent.
Next Wednesday being Ash Wednesday there will be service in Charles Church. Last Sunday the ceremony of blessing the candles took place.

Mrs. Murray one of the old residents of the 4th con., died on Monday. Her funeral took place on Sunday at Marysville cemetery. She was 74 years of age.

Mrs. Denis Callaghan, of Peterboro', who was taken very ill at Mrs. James Farrell's, was we are glad to learn much better, and is now considered out of danger.

Mr. Denis Callaghan, who was here to attend the funeral of the late Mrs. Doyle, has returned to Cobhill.

The wedding bells are again ringing. Mr. & Mrs. Robert Winters, of Lonsdale, were united in marriage on Sunday last.

On Monday last, Mr. Bernard McGuinness, eldest son of the late Mr. Hugh McGuinness, of the 7th con., was married to Miss Catherine Buckley, 8th con. The ceremony took place at St. Charles' Church, and was performed by the Rev. Father McCarthy. We wish the young couple every happiness. We hope the happy couple, living on the 7th con., will follow Mr. McGuinness' good example.

One of our gallant knights recently went with his horse and cutter to enquire for a sick relative. When the knight was in the saddle he met his horse and being driven by two lovely females. He caught the lines and in some mysterious manner the cutter upset and the two lovely forms were hurled in the snow. At this time we will drop the curtain and say no more.

Mr. & Mrs. Hanley were in Napanee on Tuesday attending the funeral of Mrs. Hanley's sister, the late Miss Isabelle Jordan.

A POULTRY MARKET.

The little town of Smith's Falls, in the county of Lunenburg, has become famous for its Christmas poultry market, which we believe had long been in this way. Several years ago the vicinity of the town was visited with a plague of grasshoppers, which ate up almost every green thing on the farms. Some one suggested the breeding of turkeys as a means of exterminating the plague, and in the following summer many broods of young turkeys were hatched out. The little fellow in their turn fell upon the grasshoppers, and it was not long until the latter were visibly thinned out. The turkeys fortunately, and the farmers of the district rejoiced not only at the disappearance of the plague but in the possession of large flocks of turkeys in the best condition for Christmas tables. But recently some of the market was going to be glutted, and such would undoubtedly have been the case were it not for the suggestion that a poultry fair be opened in the town some what after the manner of one of the old fashioned cattle fairs of the county. Arrangements were made accordingly, and to the surprise of farmers buyers were on hand from Montreal and two or three American cities. The fair was a great success, good prices were realized, and one or two car loads were shipped to New York. Next year the stock of turkeys was largely increased, and so also were the stocks of geese, ducks and hens. Three years ago some ten car loads were shipped from the little town to New York, Boston and other cities. And so the Christmas poultry fair of Smith's Falls has continued to expand until now it has reached what may fairly be considered immense proportions. An Ottawa dispatch of 16th December gave this account of it:

A train of twenty-one cars loaded with turkeys for the New York market passed eastward over the Canada Atlantic last week. The train load was valued at $35,000. The turkeys were purchased in the neighborhood of Carleton Place, Smith's Falls and Perth.

Just think of that! A shipment of turkeys from one county equal in value to the crop of 3,000 acres of fall wheat, at the average yield and market price in the past year.—Canadian Agriculturist.

NAIL THESE REMINDERS TO THE BARN DOOR.

If the iron wedge will not draw a nail a fire of chips and heat it.

Heap up and tramp down solidly the snow around the young fruit trees.

Water, green food and meat fowls must have to prosper during the winter.

Watch the outlets of the tile-drains, that they do not become clogged with ice.

There is one part of the farm that is not benefited by drainage: the manure heap. Politeness pays in the cow-stable. A gentle man gets more milk than a harsh man.

Straw and corn fodder are best worked into manure by putting them through good animals.

The best prevention of trouble at lambing time is daily exercise for the ewes during winter.

Take the bridle with you when you go to breakfast, and put them near the stove while you eat.

Separate the weaker animals; they need extra feed, whereas with the stronger they get scarce feed.

Profit in farming comes from the maximum crops, the products of winter thought and summer work.

If the chain pump is clogged up with ice do not give the crank a jerk. Both wheel and chain break more easily when very dry.

Every farmer may be the architect of his own fortune, and it is poor policy to let the job out to luck.

Harness hung in the stables is damaged as much by the grass and dampness there as it is worn by use.

When green ice is used for fuel part of the heat is absorbed to convert the water in the fuel into vapor.

If you do not wish cloudy and lifeless ground in the spring keep the cattle off the fields when the soil is soft.

Drive your horses a little to one side when you stop with a load on the sled. This makes it easier to start the load.

A fire burns better in a hot than in a cold furnace; it is equally true that an animal well wintered is half summered.

If open, outdoor feed-troughs are turned over at night, they will not be filled with snow and ice in the morning.

If you place the ax near the stove for fifteen minutes it will cut better and not be so apt to break along the edge.

The flavor of the fuel used for smoking meat is somewhat imparted to the meat; hence the fuel should be selected carefully.

You have no right to feed a dog so long as you have not the money to provide your family with good papers and books.

A LETTER FROM QUEBEC.

(Translated from the French.)

GENTLEMEN, I have deferred writing the letter to testify to the benefits derived from the use of your SIMON'S LINIMENT. It has done wonders among all the people who have used it about here.
I can certify that in every case where I have used it upon myself I have been very well satisfied.
Mr. N. Mooney, of St. Sylvester, had a bad leg which was said to be incurable. I told him to use Simon's Liniment, and it has effected a complete cure in a very short time. His neighbor, Mr. John Delvin, having received a serious cut on his leg, Mr. Mooney took him the Liniment and having used it, found himself completely cured.
I have been assured of the cures of these people, and the remedy having become known, it has created quite a demand, people coming as far as 35 miles to procure it for themselves.
Mr. Wm. Bennett, of St. Permand, has had it some time for himself, and he has since bought it for his friends, who suffer from Rheumatism, and they have all been well satisfied.
I have never known any medicine to have had such good results about here as Simon's Liniment.
Hoping that it will prove as satisfactory elsewhere.

I am, yours truly,
DAMASE PAGÉOT, Merchant.

A GREAT SECRET, OR, SHALL IT BE DONE.

CHAPTER XVII.

A cry broke from old Madame Monnier's lips as Gerald entered the gamekeeper's cottage. She was alarmed by two words from her only son, and in his next breath she, just pulled off his cap and took him by the arm for a moment from his mouth in ungracious welcome, while the old woman brought for ward a chair for the young gentleman, still staring at him with vacant mistrust.

"What's that matter, grumpy?" said he, patting his hand gently on her arm. Madame Monnier, who, by the way, looked scarcely older or more weathered than her son, was not prepared to be overhauled with wit; and the feeble friendliness she usually showed to Gerald was considered an unfattering preference.

This evening, however, something had evidently happened to trouble her weak wits, for she drew herself away from his touch, mumbling incoherently and in a low voice.

"Don't mind her," said the gamekeeper sharply; and he signed to her that her presence was no longer wanted, with an extra wrinkle in his ugly face which caused her to shuffle hastily into the next room.

"What's your business, monsieur?" he then asked.

"But that was the very last thing that Gerald would have said to her. He had come to her as he had to her when he had become of Babette. At this juncture the gamekeeper's little eyes fastened on him; but the subject had lost much of its interest to Gerald lately, and although he grew red under his mother's glance, he was not much disconcerted by it.

"My mother's rheumatism is no better; she can't expect it at her age. And Babette—why, she's gone to the service."

"To service?" repeated Gerald, in astonishment.

"Yes; why not? I don't approve of keeping a great sprawling girl idle at home, but her head turned to some philanthropic fool, while her old father is out tugging to keep her in luxury."

"O!" said Gerald quite simply. The gamekeeper's speech had ignored all the facts of the case so completely that assent and dissent were out of the question. He wondered whether he himself was the "philandering fool" alluded to, or whether the term was meant for the stranger he had seen with Babette.

"I fear stronger that the girl was in some way linked with the man about whom he had such grave suspicions; and Gerald, who had to still in hiding his feelings, found himself returning the gamekeeper's sidelong looks with a wide stare of mistrust. As soon as he became conscious of this, the young fellow started up, hot and uncomfortable; he knew that he had failed as a detective, so he threw off his character.

"Look here, Monsieur," said he, leaning against the high stone chimney piece and unusually kicking one of the burning logs, with his eyes fixed on the fire. "I wish you would tell me what interest you have in what I am saying. You needn't think that—Babette and I were always great chums, you know, and of course we're not children now; but I can't help feeling a great interest in her, and—and I should really be awfully glad to know that she—that she is all right in fact."

"Succre-ye, monsieur!" growled the gamekeeper. "I should think if her father is satisfied as to her safety, that is enough. And it is very good of you to be so interested in her, but she is in better hands than—yours." And he looked straight at Gerald with mean and impudent suspicion in every line of his face.

"The young man grew red, with alarm as well as anger. He thrust his hands into his pockets and looked at Monsieur Monnier steadily.

"Well, I can't make you speak," said he after a minute's pause. "But I know some body who can. You know very well it's nonsense to pretend you suggest my motives, because you don't. I never had a motive in my life that wasn't clear compared to the best of yours. For you've something more to account for than I have. I saw you sneaking along the road from Orleans on the night of the murder, and it's my belief you knew something about it, you infernal old fellow!"

Gerald had meant to keep this suspicion a dead secret; but the sight of the gamekeeper, doubled by the fact that he had in his mind but the person as much as himself, as possible, blinding and equating at him cautiously in the light of night, so irritated the young man that he blurted out the accusing words almost against his own will.

Monsieur stuck to his lean pointed chin, gazed up his blue lips, and blinked at the visitor more persistently than ever, but without giving any intimation that his sensitive nature was wounded. Gerald's hands twitched in his pockets during the rather awkward silence. Then the injured old man nodded his head slowly two or three times with a crackling laugh of generous contempt.

"It's very easy to come here," he began mockingly, "and to say hard words to a poor old man when you find that his daughter is no longer about to say soft ones to you. And you young gentlemen think poor men were only made for you to kick and point your fingers at. Gerald looked at him as if on the point of illustrating part of his theory. "But there is a heaven above, monsieur."

"Yes, and there's something else underneath," interrupted Gerald hotly, "and you'll get what you deserve some day, if you don't now."

"The salute watch over the innocent, monsieur," said the gamekeeper, with grotesque resignation; and you and your haughty madam won't get much out of your young visits here."

Gerald looked at him puzzled. Had Madame Monnier been already? Had she failed, as he had feared, as he himself had, in extracting anything worth hearing from the latter? He looked at the bewilderment on his face encouraged Monsieur, who went on in a much more assured tone.

"I should like to know what your patron Monsieur Boreford would say, if I went to go my girl. Why, it's enough to see you turned out of his house, that it would."

His righteous indignation carried him just a little too far. He thought, though simple enough to be deceived by the blue-eyed young girl, had seen through the craft of her less fascinating father. So he said quietly.

"You've changed your tune very suddenly, Monsieur, after thanking me so warmly as you did six weeks ago for my kindness to you. As you've grown so suspicious, I'd better give you a chance of making a proper complaint to Mr. Boreford."

For the first time the man was disconcerted. His withered skin took a bluish tint, and his knobby hands clenched the wooden stave of his chair.

"Come, Monsieur Gerald," said he after a few moments' pause, with a futile effort to be genial, "old friends like you and me don't quarrel except in fun. I got lonely and fretful now of nights—miss my daughter, you know, and I don't see how I could harm you to Mr. Boreford. It was all a boy and girl friendship between you and Babette, I know; though perhaps the old pattern being so austere, might not see how innocent it was."

From under his shaggy eyebrows he looked at Gerald, gave no word, and no sign of being intimidated by this suggestion.

"I think he will see the matter in the right light," Monsieur, he said steadily; "at my rate, I'll take my chance of that."

Turning quickly, with a strong sense of his position as high in the community of the society, the young man was already at the door, when he felt the grip of a sinewy hand upon his arm. Monsieur's eyes were fixed on him with a look of fear and anxiety as he detained his guest.

"You wouldn't say anything to get a poor man into trouble would you?" said he with most unattractive whine of bustling entreaty. "I've been a good servant to Mr. Boreford, but a word from a young gentleman so high in his position as Monsieur might do me harm, which I'm sure I've never deserved. And on more suspicion, and such childish suspicion too! Mr. Boreford would never harm a poor old man."

Gerald rose himself away, opened the door, and looked out into the darkness at the blinking fox eyes that watched him furtively in the darkness as he dashed down the narrow red-tiled garden path and out at the gate as he he turned out the road, on his way back to "Les Bouleaux"; he thought he heard a weak voice quavering out his name: "Monsieur Gerald."

But he paid no attention to the faint cry, believing it to be the work of his fancy, until he heard the cottage door slammed by the irritated gamekeeper, and immediately after the door of a woman on the ground behind him. He topped, looked round, and found himself face to face with old Madame Monnier, who was looking at him with a look of intense wailing and wailing than ever, but she was in such piteous distress that Gerald's heart was touched, and he submitted to be claved by her thin fingers, and to be turned to a lot of pointless discourse, in which she alternately reviled him for "taking her granddaughter away," and implored him "to get her back from the hands of that villain."

"It's all right, la mere; the wolf won't do her any harm," said he soothingly.

He had no hope of learning anything from the old woman's wailing, and he was startled when, after staring blankly into his face for a few moments without speaking, she turned away and said:

"And they say Paris is such a wicked place! O, I have heard such tales of what befalls of poor country girls when they go to the city."

"Paris!" said Gerald, with suddenly vivid interest. "Has Babette gone to Paris, do you say?"

His remembrance frightened her, and it was some minutes before he could get her to confess that "ce beau monsieur" had said she would be quite safe there, and that she would be quite safe and happy and good."

At this confirmation of his worst fears concerning his old playfellow, Gerald turned upon the old woman so savagely that she broke away from him and trottered back to the gate of the cottage. He followed her half way up the garden path, but as she glared at him from the door, and gave him no answer to his questions but disconnected mummings, he turned back impatiently, and took a short cut to "Les Bouleaux," with his hat and stick.

Every one had gone to bed, but as he crept softly upstairs to his room, and paused a moment at the top of the stairs, he fancied he heard a faint sound of feet from Peggy's room. A throb of tenderness in the young man's heart was succeeded by an impulse of rage against the man who was to be his husband.

"To give a girl, like that to a fellow that doesn't care for her! How can Mr. Boreford have the heart to do it? He thought to himself bitterly, as he stole to his own room, not for whole some sleep, but for untimely consideration of the hopeless riddle into which human affairs seemed to have got. After passing most of the night in reflections which he considered philosophical, while they were only love sick, or of course came down to the following morning in the seediest and sorriest of moods. He was glad Peggy had not been present; he gobbled up his breakfast in a great hurry, and he was off to the office, and was furious when Mr. Boreford, in the fulness of his heart, sent down Pierre to say that as to day was to be a fête in honor of his daughter's engagement. M. Gerald would please return of the office in time to receive her."

Gerald's face fell as he drove off to St. Pierre. A ghastly truth there would be, these relations of the Fournier, appalling might not be true, but they were so full of seductibility. However, there was nothing for it but to submit; so at half-past two of the young girl returned to "Les Bouleaux," and the old woman, who was seated in the outer salon among antique spinster cousins, high dried and dull under and under, two or three young and stiff young girls of the boisterously ingenious sort, a couple of particularly offensive spoilt children, and the Fournier family.

Mr. Boreford had retired to the inner salon with a chosen party of proud old gentlemen whom he left to entertain the ladies; for the feeble health was sufficient excuse for his withdrawal from the clamor in the next room, where poor Peggy had to undergo a martyrdom in the midst of a group of ladies, who pulled her about like a doll and asked her questions about to the intelligence of a child of six, and found the unhappy little foreigner very amusing. At last her patience gave way when all this meaningless chatter of Madame Fournier's asked her indulgently whether she was not enchanted to find her appointed husband so good looking and charming.

"No, madame," answered Peggy with simple aversion, while her cheeks flushed and her eyes flashed with indignation. "I don't admire himself and charms other women; and nobody who pleases my father."

To the intense relief of Gerald, who overheard this appalling speech in the corner of the inner salon, when he opened the door of the spoilt children from harking off the knobs of carved armchairs with his pen-knife, the ladies received it as a great joke and repeated it to the young man who was seated next to him.

"The room that was very good, every corner was quickly occupied. Peggy jerked her own chair violently into that of her right neighbor, and made room for Gerald on her left."

"Come and sit by me, Gerald," she whispered eagerly, under cover of the clatter and rustle of the ladies, and she looked at him with a look of intense interest. Then I needn't say so much of that smirking, chattering Frenchman. And she glanced at the young man, who was seated next to her, and collected materials for a burlesque of the whole entertainment by and by.

"I don't talk to her. Her little ad, bewildered face, as she sat silently amidst the clatter, moved him so much that he could barely trust himself to look in her direction. He was growing miserable and moonstruck when some words spoken at the other end of the room brought him back to himself."

"And how is it Mr. Smith is not here to day?" said M. Fournier was asking.

"He couldn't get back in time," answered Mr. Boreford.

"I can't think what keeps him in London," the other went on. "Smith's erratic man, but he does business I never can understand."

"But the business gets done," broke in Mr. Boreford, quickly.

"Yes, yes, but you are satisfied I ought to be. Still, I can't help thinking my friend has been growing more erratic and independent than ever lately, and what there is to detain him in London at this time of year I can't imagine. When there's work calling him to Paris too!"

"Ah, I hope he has a hand in the furnishing of M. de Breuille's new house at St. Cloud!" broke in a stout and pompous brother-in-law, with a round head, close-cropped hair, and a face of iron.

"Is it a perfect palace I believe it to be."

Gerald grew hot, remembering suddenly Mr. Shaw's words about the decadence of Mr. Shaw's house.

Yes, yes, he had a large order from him some time ago.

"Ah, if all noblemen had as much money as he, and spent it as freely, we men of commerce should not be such good Republicans, should we?" cried another brother-in-law.

"I saw him in the Champagne Flueces yesterday, and at the Opera one day last week," said M. de Breuille, as if he looked as if he "There is something in blood after all; he might be a prince, that man!" With his tall figure, as slim and as straight as a reed, and his eyes as blue as the sky, and his hair as black as the night, and his face as pale as the moon, and his hands as white as the snow, and SPECIAL LINES.

We always have some specially attractive lines of goods that are not to be had elsewhere at the prices.

LINE NO. 1.

which we have just opened is a lot of Bleached and Cream Table Linens, hand loom woven goods, without dressing, at very low prices. If you want a good wearing Table Linen always buy the Cream, loom finish.

LOT NO. 2

Is a grand lot of nearly 3,000 yards of Print, to be sold at 10 cents, same as usually sold at 12 1/2 cents.

LOT NO. 3

Is a lot of Ladies' and Children's Cotton Hosiery, black and colored, at prices never before heard of, from 5 cents a pair.

LOT NO. 4

Is a big quantity of Shirts, Gingham, etc., at lower prices than elsewhere.

LOT NO. 5

Is a lot of Hickory Cottonades, the best wearing goods in the market, at 5 cts a yard less than regular prices.

LOT NO. 6

Is a lot of Grey and White Cottons, at less prices for quality than can be had elsewhere.

We make these statements because we know these goods were bought out of the usual way, and much less than regular prices, and that these bargains were confined to ourselves in this section.

A lot of new Tweeds are now out, and they are splendid value. We have opened out our new Embroideries in narrow widths, and medium width, as well as Allovers, Flouncing and Skirting widths, and in both Swiss and Canbio muslins.

Our new Scrims for Curtains are now in, as well as Laces to match them.

Our new Oriental Laces are in.

Our new Tweeds, Linens and Towels are in.

We pride ourselves on the fact that our importations will excel and surpass in point of variety, quality and value anything ever shown here.

Still a few winter goods to be sold cheap.

COMMUNICATIONS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for opinions expressed or assertions made by our correspondents.

TO THE TOWN'S PEOPLE.

To the Editor of The Tribune.

DEAR SIR:—A few weeks ago I noticed a communication in reference to lighting our streets with gas, and with the writer I quite agree that our streets should be lighted. I believe the Deseronto Gas Company make an offer to light so many lamps for the year for the sum of $200. I am sure we should not grumble at the price considering what the village of Napanee is paying for light.
We are an enterprising town full of life and progress and should not be behind our neighbors when we have such an offer for such an accommodation. If our merchants are enterprising enough to light their places of business, we, the people, should be willing to see our streets lit up. If you will give the matter some consideration, Mr. Editor, the people, I am sure, will fall into the idea and when the moon is steady we will have light and our town will have an advanced appearance.

RATEPAYER.

OUTRAGEOUS CONDUCT.

To the Editor of The Tribune.

DEAR SIR:—On Saturday, 11th inst., not far from Deseronto, while a mother and daughter were engaged getting dinner, the husband came in with fury in his eye about some trifling matter which happened the day before. He came swearing, stamping, turning the table, tearing the table cloth, &c. His wife remonstrated when he turned on her, choking her and pulling her hair. A lady spectator was so frightened that she could do nothing. His daughter interfered he abused her and his other children. His family are in mortal terror of their lives, and as they live in a somewhat lonely place, it is not improbable that there will be a tragedy. It is said he has had himself from three or four different places for abusing his family after spending in his wife's property through carelessness. Now, Mr. Editor, should not his name be published. Next time his wife will be seen in large print if I can manage it.

Yours truly,

INDIGNATION

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION.

Mr. R. E. Stafford, having accepted a position with his brother in Oswego, left for that city on Monday morning bearing with him the good wishes of many friends in Deseronto and vicinity. Having been long connected with the local company Band, the members of that popular organization decided to testify their friendship and appreciation of his services in a practical manner. Accordingly all the members of the Band on Friday evening last waited on Mr. Stafford at his home when a flattering address was read by Mr. Moore, and a handsome gold pin, which took the form of a representative carpenter's plane, was at the same time presented to their departing comrade. We append the address and reply:

ADDRESS.

Deseronto, Feb. 10th, 1888.

To R. E. STAFFORD,
Dear Sir:—We, the members of the Rath-bun Company Band, leave with regret that you are about to leave us for another place across the line. We beg to request the acceptance by you of the accompanying gold pin as a slight testimonial and token of the esteem in which you are held by the Band.
We regret very much that you are to leave us, for your connection with us has been one of straightforward and satisfactory dealing. As our Treasurer you have acted honestly and fairly, and you have attended to our business punctually and ably and it will be hard to fill your place. The Band wishes you every success in your new situation, and we trust the door of prosperity will be always open to you. Your sueh always let in the rays of health; and your blood always be closed against sickness and all adversity. If at any time you should return to your native town you will always find a hearty welcome from the Band.
Again wishing you every success,
we remain yours on behalf of the Band.
(Signed.)

REPLY.

To THE RATHBUN COMPANY BAND.

Gentlemen:—In reply to your address and kind presentation, I would say, it is with regret that I leave you, as I have lived a long time among you and have made many friends. I can say I find it hard to part but I do so wishing you every success in all your undertakings and hoping prosperity will always be yours. Every time that I look at your presents I am sure it will remind me of you, and as I intend taking THE TRIBUNE, every time I see your advertisement in it I will wish you success, and if ever I come back to Deseronto I want to be a Band Boy. Thanking you kindly for this handsome pin.

I remain, yours,

R. E. STAFFORD.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

The corset war which has been raging for so long a period in the "Woman World" columns of the Globe has drawn out every possible side argument, commendatory and in support of tight lacing. Physicians, philosophers, the novelist and the philanthropist have each in turn taken sides, identically and forcibly portrayed the evils resulting from the prevalent and pernicious custom.
At the same time the other side of the question has received from its votaries all that could possibly be claimed for it.

Among the many and ingenious arguments advanced in its favor but few are possessed even the merit of consistency; indeed, throughout the whole controversy there was an apparent undercurrent of evidence sufficient to indicate that the governing motives in perpetuating this tortuous habit, spring largely from a desire to draw admi-nation from the other sex. If there are any reasonable grounds for this latter assumption, then much good may come of all this public discussion, for, at least, one important fact has been amply demonstrated: that the slender sex generally are not in syn-pathy with the fashion, but rather regard it with genuine disfavor, any tendency to the "swamp like" waist. It may be assumed he objects on general principles, chiefly, perhaps, from a livelier appreciation for harmony of proportion, and a strong inherent antipathy to all artificial aids to fashion's folly; more probably, however, because of a finer conception of the laws of nature, and the eternal fitness of things which would be likely to induce him to contemplate with decided contempt the geometrical incongruity manifestly apparent in the proportion of an average coat sleeve to a fifteen inch waist.

We still hear frequent complaints about the "dullness" of our village. Unfortunately they are not without sufficient reasons to justify them. It has come to be a proverbial fact, that the social element in Deseronto is refractory, and, in consequence, a difficulty to arrive at any system that would get up a temperature necessary to thaw it out. Of course we have not the advantages of larger towns in the way of theatres, phi-harmonic societies, social assemblies, &c.,
but we have the facilities for all sorts of outdoor amusements, and it is evident that young people themselves are largely to blame for much of the "dullness" complained of. Of a surety they would seem as if old age with its crippling ailments had overtaken the generation before its time.
Oh, for some of the spirit of the past! I do not mean the "gay, gaudy, and gallant and far clad maidens" reported loyally, night after night on icy arena three times the size of Barnhart's, or perhaps the "gay, gaudy, and gallant and far clad maiden" in rolling "straw ride" or moonlight snowshoe tramp, or tripped the "light fantastic" within the walls of some hospitable village restaurant. These things are now but rarely heard of, and we are led to the conclusion that the spirit of the age has departed from Deseronto. Surely among so many well-to-do young men and maiden some effort could be made towards reviving the time honored, invigorating and pleasure abounding recreations.

I was constantly amazed the other day while listening to a fellow-citizen, who was condemning in pretty strong terms the method pursued by one of our churches, of frequent and unexpected adjournments in their singing at the Sunday services. He explained that as congregational singing was particularly desirable, it was highly important that choir and congregation should be in sympathy, so that the exercises would be enjoyed by the participants, and become a source of pleasure of the service. But when a meek and unassuming workshop, intent only on adding to the best of his weak ability, to the general praise, suddenly finds himself sustaining the part of leading soloist, it is rather too much for his modesty, and he forthwith substitutes in considerable measure, during only to whisper the remaining verses. I at once tendered my sympathy having been there myself, but could only suggest that the best way out of the difficulty was for him to join the choir and become posted.

A LETTER FROM QUEBEC.

(Translated from the French.)

GENTLEMEN,—
I have deferred writing the letter to testify to the benefits derived from the use of DR. DOREN WEND'S HAIR RESTORE. It has done wonders among all the people who have used it about here.
I can certify that in every case where I have used it upon myself I have been very well satisfied.
Mr. N. Mooney, of St. Sylvester, had a bad leg which was said to be incurable. I told him to use Simon's Liniment, and it has effected a complete cure in a very short time. His neighbor, Mr. John Delvin, having received a serious cut on his leg, Mr. Mooney took him the Liniment, and having used it, found himself completely cured.
I have been assured of the cures of these people, and the remedy having become known, it has created quite a demand, people coming as far as 35 miles to procure it for themselves.
Mr. Wm. Bonnett, of St. Ferdinand, has had it some time for himself, and he has since recommended it to his friends, who suffer from Rheumatism, and they have all been well satisfied.
I have never known any medicine to have had such good results about here as Simon's Liniment.
Hoping that it will prove as satisfactory elsewhere.
I am, yours truly,
DAMASCH PAGEOT, Merchant.

Madame Fourrier, good soul, who "came of an ugly race, and looked upon handsome people as eccentricities of Nature that should not be judged too severely, tried to heal the breach by a well-meant but useless inquiry when Madame de Lancy and M. de General would leave Calais.

"Not for some time, I think," answered Madame Lancy. "I have just made up my mind to ask my husband to take a house for a few months; the place is so cheerful and the society so charming."

Victor glanced uneasily round to see how his relations took this speech; but it excited nothing more than surprise in most of them.

"I don't think you will find it so gay if you retire down here," said Madame Fourrier doubtfully.

"And poultry is so dear here!" hazarded a cousin; adding hurriedly, with an awkward laugh, "but of course that would not affect you, madame."

"No," said Madame de Lancy, slowly, "as heres to go," "I will not let me much, for while I am here I shall live upon excitement."

The ladies present came one and all to the conclusion that Madame de Lancy was mad; but the gentlemen viewed her eccentricities more leniently.

"I could never have believed that I should have found a romantic robber-haunted district so near to civilisation," she went on.

"I really feel a delicious dream of being attacked on my way back to Calais."

And she glanced at Gerald. Before he could offer to escort her back, however, Victor sprang forward with open jealousy burning in his face.

"Let me go with you, madame; no one knows the road as well as I do."

Madame de Lancy laughed as she laid her hand on Gerald's arm.

"What would your fiancé say?" said she, in a low voice, which, however, Peggy knew little can overtake a man.

"You may take him, madame, I don't mind," she broke in with alacrity, glancing alternately at Victor and the beautiful girl, with open disapproval of their friendly attitude.

"You are not jealous, then," said Madame de Lancy, playfully raising the white little face, and bending to look straight into the elish eyes.

"Not of Victor," answered Peggy, boldly, but in so low a whisper that it needed the sidelong look of anger she cast at Gerald to make her meaning clear.

Madame de Lancy kept the indignant face between her cheeks for a moment longer, her interest evidently deepening as she looked. Then she turned very suddenly, to try to get the light of the lamp upon the girl's face.

But Peggy wriggled herself out of the lady's grasp, and, plunging into the group of which Madame Fourrier formed a member, put her hand into the motherly lap and eluded herself. Victor, who had recovered his self-possession, wisely refrained from forming one of the party that gathered in the hall to see Madame de Lancy cry off, but devoted himself to dissipating the momentary consternation caused by his behavior to her with such a success that he made, still less unpleasant than before.

No one guessed how he loathed every member of the dull society he was entertaining, and how madly he wished to see the motherly—the gentle English lady Madame de Lancy so unaccountably and openly preferred to him.

The little square omnibus which had brought the unexpected visitor to "Les Bouleaux" rumbled slowly for some distance on the road back to Calais before either of the occupants broomed any subject of particular interest to them. Gerald felt any of doing so, and Madame de Lancy was not talkative.

"So that little wild girl is the queen of women!" she said, at last, smiling rather contemptuously, as he thought.

"Yes, madame," he answered, feeling hot and not very happy, but resolved to stick to his colors.

"Well, I have examined her and thought over the situation, and I think it would be much better for you to give her up."

"I know that, madame," said he, simply, "but no fellow worth the name of a man ever does give up a girl for that reason. Besides, you can't give up what you haven't got, and what you never had a chance of getting. Please don't talk about it. It won't mean any difference, and I can't explain myself, and it only makes me look like a fool."

"Well, what shall we talk about, then?"

"Won't you tell me why you came to see Mr. Beresford? I can't help thinking it was about—that awful night's work; and I know you went to see old Monnier about it. You have told me just enough to make me half mad to know more."

"What do you want to know?"

"The name of the man who killed my father. Only tell me and I will hunt him out and—"

"That is unnecessary, for I know where he is."

Gerald started violently.

"It is cruel of you to play with me like this, madame," said he, with bitterness and energy most unusual in him. "You led me to believe—"

"What I believed myself—that I had a clue between my very fingers. I have found out to-day that I was mistaken—that the work before us is not even begun."

"Well, how am I to begin it? Give me something to do, some reason for getting away from this place, or I think I shall go mad."

"Ah!" broke out Madame Lancy, rather bitterly. "It is in your girl, she is the girl, who is in your head. If you could have her, and be happy with her, you would soon forget all about clearing your father's name."

"You are hard upon me, madame. I have nursed the hope of avenging him as long and so you too will have to live like an old dream, and I can hardly take in the belief that it will ever be realised."

"The other hope—that that's a vain one too!"

"Yes, I—I suppose so."

"No, I haven't, madame," he said at last. "But if one were to let all one's hopes go out at once, one wouldn't get on very well, and I suppose you don't know what it is to be quite cracked about one?"

And he looked at her with his admiration, but she understood how she felt, and she was cracked about one?"

She turned toward him with a sudden gust of kindness, as if he had struck the right note at last.

"Yes, Gerald, perhaps I can," she said. "And it is true that you can do nothing unless you have found out something for you to do."

"It is awfully good of you to take so much interest in me."

"Good! No, that is not the right word. Disinterested help is weak and capricious. Luckily for you, in helping you I am helping myself."

Gerald watched her face silently for a few moments, and then said, quietly, "I think I understand you. You have some grudge of your own against the man who killed my father?"

"Yes."

"How do you have been brooding over these years, just as I have done?"

"No, I had almost forgotten it when I came to Calais, but a letter from you brought me face to face with you. Then I remembered, having thought better to do that, I had a promise to keep and an oath to keep, and I came here to keep the oath and the oath concerned your father's murderer."

The young man said nothing. This woman's talk that could lie calm and so, and then be stirred by strong waves of passionate impulse, was quite a new and unexpected thing to him.

"You are unkind to me," he said, with a suggestion that she had set herself to this bloodhound's task for want of anything better to do excited in his alarm and misgivings. He glanced at her shyly, and waited for her to explain herself.

But as the little omnibus began to rattle through the stone pavements Calais streets, his mind was full of the madramatic mood, and teased the poor lad by talking of nothing but trifles; and when they reached the door of the Hotel de la Gare he helped her to alight in a rather crestfallen manner.

"Good-night, madame," said he, hesitatingly, as she was sweeping past him into the night.

"O come in," she said lightly, glancing behind her at him.

But Mr. Beresford will not like me to stay here. I know it will displease him very seriously."

"Mr. Beresford's freaks need no longer disturb you. You are not going back to 'Les Bouleaux'."

She laid her arm firmly on the arm of the astonished lad, and drew him within the door, and he stood at the moment time in a very quiet and careless way.

"Do you know where Mr. Smith is, Gerald?"

"Mr. Smith! He is in London."

"You know his address?"

"O yes; I write him long letters at Mr. Beresford's dictation very often."

CHAPTER XVIII.

Gerald Stanton heard Madame de Lancy's mandate very calmly, and let her lead him up stairs into her sitting-room unresistingly. But at the second knock he returned to the door, and looked well at his face by the light of the candles, which had been burning brightly, and he saw that he had overrated his good-night.

"I am sorry I can't do what you wish, madame, but you have been very kind to me. But I could not think of going to England without Mr. Beresford's permission. Good-night."

He was at the door before the finished speaking, and would have been out of the room in another moment if Madame de Lancy had not darted across the room with the lightness of a girl, and caught both his hands in a grip so unexpectedly savage and muscular that Gerald instinctively tried to wrench himself free as angrily as if she had been a man.

"Wait," she said, looking straight into his indignant face with hard, dilated eyes. "What has Mr. Beresford overdone for you that you haven't overpaid him for? What clerk in his office has worked so hard as you, or received so little pay for it? What has he ever done to make your life worth living? Can you doubt now that it would have been better to buy your way back to England, and let me see you up in Paris six years, than to spend the best years of your life in the dull drudgery from which he never came to get you free?"

You told me that you had killed your father. Break away from this man now—it may be your last chance. Follow my instructions, find out your old friends, and there is still time for you to clear your father's name and to live a happy life for your own sake, give you my solemn word you are not even safe in this one."

Gerald's face grew white and wet as he looked at her and heard the burning words. She was hissing into his ear like an enchantress. At the end he tried again to free himself, and he was shaking from some spell.

"I cannot go, madame. He is my own player at least, if he is not my benefactor."

"You are a fool," said she, with a sudden and deadly without releasing him, and as she spoke again, her voice was no longer whispering peremptory, but rang out in sharp clear tones like a bell.

"Do you know," she said, "that it is your presence at 'Les Bouleaux' that is haunting Miss Beresford's marriage with young Fourrier?"

The young man's limbs began to twitch and to tremble, and he was again like wax in her hands. She pressed her advantage instantly.

"The old man knows of your fancy for his daughter. He does not care a straw for my pain, but he will allow me all danger from a possible return of your affection by marrying her before your eyes, while this day is still before me. He will not love her. Are you willing to witness this?"

"My going away would not change Mr. Beresford's plans. You do not know him," said Gerald, hoarsely.

"My poor boy, you have no one else to trust. You may as well trust me," said she with a change in tone and manner to coaxing tones, as she again drew nearer to him. "If you will do as I wish, and cross to England to-night, I will not only get you Mr. Beresford's permission to remain away, but I will swear to you that his daughter shall marry no one against her own will."

Gerald raised his head, breathing heavily, and looked with dull, dazed eyes wistfully into the passionate, hard, yet sweetly-changing face of the woman.

"I must go away—from her!" he said brokenly. "You will only be good to her if I do that. You will not want you to call it a sin to let her go. It is not at all to push me blindly on in the dark. What power is it you have over me?"

"I have the power of a faithful woman, my dear boy; but there is nothing in the world like it," said Madame de Lancy, with a sudden change in her expression, as if it had been a moment that it had made sufficient impression.

"And you want me to trust only to that?"

"Ah, you are not yet braved bravely enough," she broke out impatiently. "It is not enough for you that the girl should be safe; she must be safe with you. Well, then, follow my instructions for the next week, and you shall be free to marry the girl—if you ever come to me."

The magnetic influence of this woman's glowing beauty and passionate, capricious earnestness was so strong that Gerald, who had been in the young man's heart and swept away all doubt as to her power of fulfilling her promises.

"I will do as you bid me," he said, almost staggered, as at last he felt himself free from her strong grasp.

And he turned toward the door, his brain dazed, his senses quivering, his heart on fire. A faint glimmer of relief, which involuntarily escaped from the lady's lips, roused his dull senses, however, and he turned, not irresolute, but with resolution changed.

"I will go to 'Les Bouleaux,' and ask Mr. Beresford to let me return to England. If, as you say, he wants to get rid of me, so do not let me go at once, and I will come and receive your orders."

"You are unkind to me," he said, with a suggestion that she had set herself to this bloodhound's task for want of anything better to do excited in his alarm and misgivings. He glanced at her shyly, and waited for her to explain herself.

But as the little omnibus began to rattle through the stone pavements Calais streets, his mind was full of the madramatic mood, and teased the poor lad by talking of nothing but trifles; and when they reached the door of the Hotel de la Gare he helped her to alight in a rather crestfallen manner.

Gerald Stanton heard Madame de Lancy's mandate very calmly, and let her lead him up stairs into her sitting-room unresistingly. But at the second knock he returned to the door, and looked well at his face by the light of the candles, which had been burning brightly, and he saw that he had overrated his good-night.

"I am sorry I can't do what you wish, madame, but you have been very kind to me. But I could not think of going to England without Mr. Beresford's permission. Good-night."

He was at the door before the finished speaking, and would have been out of the room in another moment if Madame de Lancy had not darted across the room with the lightness of a girl, and caught both his hands in a grip so unexpectedly savage and muscular that Gerald instinctively tried to wrench himself free as angrily as if she had been a man.

"Wait," she said, looking straight into his indignant face with hard, dilated eyes. "What has Mr. Beresford overdone for you that you haven't overpaid him for? What clerk in his office has worked so hard as you, or received so little pay for it? What has he ever done to make your life worth living? Can you doubt now that it would have been better to buy your way back to England, and let me see you up in Paris six years, than to spend the best years of your life in the dull drudgery from which he never came to get you free?"

You told me that you had killed your father. Break away from this man now—it may be your last chance. Follow my instructions, find out your old friends, and there is still time for you to clear your father's name and to live a happy life for your own sake, give you my solemn word you are not even safe in this one."

Gerald's face grew white and wet as he looked at her and heard the burning words. She was hissing into his ear like an enchantress. At the end he tried again to free himself, and he was shaking from some spell.

"I cannot go, madame. He is my own player at least, if he is not my benefactor."

"You are a fool," said she, with a sudden and deadly without releasing him, and as she spoke again, her voice was no longer whispering peremptory, but rang out in sharp clear tones like a bell.

"Do you know," she said, "that it is your presence at 'Les Bouleaux' that is haunting Miss Beresford's marriage with young Fourrier?"

Madame de Lancy, for not saying more to you about what you have done, and have promised to do. But—"

"Thank you for promises are always unkept," she interrupted, she interrupted laughing. "In a month from now you shall fall at my feet and bless me."

Then she shook both her hands again heartily, and watched him as he made his way among the crowd of passengers hurrying out of the station. She waited intentionally for the arrival of the Paris train before bringing him down to the quay, and even now she looked at him with a steady gaze as he walked about the boat in search of a seat. When the gangway was drawn up she brushed her hair, but it was not until the boat had steamed away, and Gerald raised his hat to her, with a safe distance of some fifty yards between him and the shore, that her face relaxed and lost its expression of eager anxiety. Then she walked briskly to the end of the pier, and looked out over the dark shifting sea at the boat as it became a speck in the distance. Then she laughed, neither musically nor sweetly, and turned back towards the hotel.

"Four boys," she said to herself, with real pride in her voice, "it is not quite fair, perhaps, to trick him; and it is not quite fair to make I should have chosen to do this task, if I had been able to choose. But one must use such tools as come to one's hand, and he will do as well as he can. He will only follow my instructions."

These instructions, so far, had been very simple. Gerald had only to wait until the Paris train came, and then to put a letter from Madame de Lancy into his hand, and then to remain in London until he heard from her.

On the following morning Madame de Lancy drove to "Les Bouleaux," and arrived there just as M. de Lesleux came down stairs. In the arms of M. de Lesleux's arm, he insisted on receiving the visitor himself.

"What's the trouble you long, Mr. Beresford," said his tormentor sweetly, as he was ushered into his presence, and advanced toward him with a hand most sympathetically outstretched.

He gravely raised her fingers to his lips with his left hand, and thanked her for her kindness in visiting a dreary old invalid so often.

"Not at all," said she imperceptibly. "We had such a pleasant interview yesterday."

"You have come to tell me that you have brought my boy Gerald safely back, I hope, and that he is not in any danger about him last night, if he had not been in such good hands."

"It is very kind of you to say so. He is now in good hands, better even than mine; for I have sent him back to his friends in England. Ah, I knew you would be grateful," she broke out suddenly, in a different tone, as Mr. Beresford gave a slight but perceptible start. "There is no doubt he would have proved a serious obstacle to our plans."

"You are unkind to me," he said, with a suggestion that she had set herself to this bloodhound's task for want of anything better to do excited in his alarm and misgivings. He glanced at her shyly, and waited for her to explain herself.

But as the little omnibus began to rattle through the stone pavements Calais streets, his mind was full of the madramatic mood, and teased the poor lad by talking of nothing but trifles; and when they reached the door of the Hotel de la Gare he helped her to alight in a rather crestfallen manner.

"Good-night, madame," said he, hesitatingly, as she was sweeping past him into the night.

"O come in," she said lightly, glancing behind her at him.

But Mr. Beresford will not like me to stay here. I know it will displease him very seriously."

"Mr. Beresford's freaks need no longer disturb you. You are not going back to 'Les Bouleaux'."

She laid her arm firmly on the arm of the astonished lad, and drew him within the door, and he stood at the moment time in a very quiet and careless way.

"Do you know where Mr. Smith is, Gerald?"

"Mr. Smith! He is in London."

"You know his address?"

"O yes; I write him long letters at Mr. Beresford's dictation very often."

Gerald Stanton heard Madame de Lancy's mandate very calmly, and let her lead him up stairs into her sitting-room unresistingly. But at the second knock he returned to the door, and looked well at his face by the light of the candles, which had been burning brightly, and he saw that he had overrated his good-night.

"I am sorry I can't do what you wish, madame, but you have been very kind to me. But I could not think of going to England without Mr. Beresford's permission. Good-night."

"Do you know," she said, "that it is your presence at 'Les Bouleaux' that is haunting Miss Beresford's marriage with young Fourrier?"

"The War Cloud Ready to Burst—Russia Wants Money."

LONDON, Feb. 6.—Germany will be expected to attack from France when Russia, says the Summer Treaty, which has not yet appeared in the Russian press. The Moscow papers to-day are pessimistic in tone. They predict that the negotiations with Austria will not result in the interest of Russia.

FRESH MOVEMENTS ON THE FRONTIER. The Kreuz Zeitung records fresh army movements on the frontier. The hard dry frosts and the marching of men and horses and the transportation of war material, and the concentration of troops along the line of the Niemen is actively progressing. The fort works at Kovno are completed. Twelve forts connected by earthworks will protect the concentration of a force of 250,000 men designed, according to the Kreuz Zeitung, to operate against East Prussia.

RUSSIA TRYING TO RAISE A WAR LOAN. Russia continues its negotiations for 25,000,000 loan in Paris and Amsterdam, and is reported to be an 80,000,000 loan. The loan is being offered, backed by the recommendations of the French Government, are inducements for the bankers to venture. The Barings have placed 15,000,000 roubles' worth of Nikolai Railway bonds on behalf of the Russian Treasury. They represent sums advanced by the treasury to the railroad and nominally repaid. They are now pledged to the Barings, who issue them in London at 5 per cent. German investors retain the securities with great tenacity.

The selling on the Bourse to-day was of a purely speculative character, sent them down $\frac{1}{2}$ l. The buying of Prussian securities for investment was entirely ceased. American railroad securities received from St. Petersburg to-night asserts that the French loan proposals submitted by the Le Figaro were so generous that they were declined. On the other hand reports have been received at Frankfurt that a loan of 100,000,000 roubles has already been offered by Russia from French parties at a nominal rate of interest.

SWITZERLAND'S PERIL. The Hansi Schroeder incident has led the Government at Zurich to reprimand Chief of Police Fischer for supplying Herr Ebel with information to the effect that those men were spies in the employ of the German Government. Fischer was accused of having given some other section. The Foreign Office has raised a more important question as a result of this incident in regard to the refugee Socialists in Switzerland. Herr Ebel, Herbert Bismarck has opened communication with Italy and Austria on the abuse of the Asylum which Switzerland accorded to revolutionaries.

KAISER WILHELM IN GOOD HEALTH. The Emperor and Empress are now in fine health. The Emperor gives prolonged audiences daily to Gen. von Schellendorf for Albedy, Minister for supplying Herr Ebel conferences with Prince Bismarck and entertainers nightly.

CROWN PRINCE FRITZ IN BETTER HEALTH. The better prospects of the Crown Prince have caused a revision of the gayeties of Palace society. A doubt lingers regarding the actual state of the Crown Prince. The absence of Dr. Brannmann's name from the bulletin on the occasion of the last examination leaves a sense of uncertainty. The duty of performing an operation, if one became necessary, would fall upon Dr. Brannmann. The Crown Prince will remain at San Remo until the beginning of May. Dr. Hovell, Krause, and Brannmann will be in constant attendance upon him. Brannmann is ready to perform the operation of tracheotomy, which is sometimes necessary in cases of perichondritis.

The Central Bank's Victims. As in all cases of bank-ruining, many instances of suffering caused are reported. If it were only the rich and well-to-do that were injured by these smash-ups, the reason for such losses would be nearly self-evident. It is the poor that experience the pang. In one instance we know of an office boy who was ruined by the failure of a bank, representing a hoarding of half a dollar a week, were swept away. In another, we know of a poor woman who had invested her all, with the fond illusion that some day her innocent little children would be happy in reaping the benefits of her frugality. In another, we know of the collections of a firm, who were belated with their employees, being lost just when they had scraped up enough to divide something between their men, and twenty families were given more misery to endure. Instances of poor people having lost money intended to make payments on houses, furniture, piano, etc., are numerous. And while this has been the result, the wreckers, the causes of all this misery, thanks to the law's delays, have sought to escape. The victims are liable to never be brought to account. If the moral of the thing were to be heeded and poor people were to be made to feel that they were not to be taken for granted, they would not risk their money to any but absolutely safe repositories, we could almost cease to regret that the calamity happened; but it will not be so. The victims are the expert exactly the same state of things. What, then, is the good of holding the danger sign if people persist in disregarding it?

The Far Reaching. Perfume of a good name heralds the claim that a person's father, mother, or grandfather, is sure, certain, and painless remedy for corns. Fifty instances prove it to be the best. At drugs.

Mrs. Lydia Watson of Littleport, Miss, whose 101st birthday has just been celebrated, is in excellent health. Her form is erect, her eyes are clear, and her digestion. Just now she is considerably better than she was a great-granddaughter, whose recent arrival has greatly interested her. If the young people would only be content with doing so finally means putting more.

The meeting of the Young Peoples' Association of the Church of the Redeemer held last Friday night was very successful. The readings were from Dickens and were excellently rendered. There were some good musical selections, including a piano solo by Master Fred Sims which was quite creditable. At the regular meeting next Friday evening Mr. E. W. Rathbun will deliver an address.

The registration of births and deaths in municipalities is much neglected, notwithstanding that those interested are open to punishment. The Registrar General has issued instructions to assessors for this year to make inquiry regarding births and deaths in the family of the party being assessed, and if any have not been registered, to record such on his roll. Should the clerk find any he is immediately to notify the parties who are required to make the registrations to do so without delay, and in case of their neglect or refusal to proceed against them, in accordance with Sec. 26 of the Registration Act.

The Cyclorama, representing the battle of Meade, is one of the great attractions of Toronto at present. It cost $75,000, the entire scene being placed on canvases 100 feet from top to bottom and 400 feet in length. To any of our citizens visiting the city we would especially recommend this exhibition, as not only interesting and instructive, but one presenting highly artistic and delightful by the thousands have learned with pleasure that the Cyclorama Company and Grand Trunk are uniting on a grand excursion for the public to Toronto—giving all who visit the city a more nominal rate, to see this great exhibit. Excursion is to be on Feb. 24th and 25th and including round trip fare from Toronto. No doubt many from west of Kingston will join this excursion. Tickets only $2.50, $2.75, we suppose, from Deseronto. Good for two days, and including the Cyclorama.

One of the most pleasant social parties of the season was held in Frank Clement's new residence, Thoms street, on the evening of Wednesday, 8th inst. The large party present thoroughly enjoyed themselves.

The cost of building a bridge between Deseronto and Southampton would never be missed out of Mowat's surplus. How would it do for the Deseronto and Southampton town councils to ask for its appropriation?

Inspector Adams was in town the other day looking over the boilers, etc., of the Deseronto Navigation Company, to see if anything extra would be required or repairs deemed necessary before the opening of navigation.

Mr. Maurice W. Britton conducted the services at St. Mark's Church last Sunday morning in a manner most acceptable to the large congregation present on the occasion.

In the evening he read the services and Rev. A. Geo. of Belleville, preached the sermon, a boy, a resident of Tyendinaga, and received his early training in that township.

The local legislature has got down to business, the Treasurer having made his financial statement on Tuesday. It is probable that the abrogated estate as to whether receipts from crown lands should be credited to capital account or to annual expenditure.

The speaker on Monday in the House of Commons said the only branch of privilege committed in connection with the arrest of Irish members was the arrest of Patrick O'Brien in 1845, for Mr. O'Brien's case to the Committee on Privileges was referred.

The idea of a farmers' institute for last Monday has met with much favor from those interested. The meeting for discussing the matter should be held forthwith at Roslin, Read, or some central point of the riding. The presentments of the different agricultural societies in the riding might very properly convene such a meeting after the 20th was given.

The pitch poles on the various leading roads of the district are showing fearful winter. They are a disgrace to the road authorities. The local government should make a list of these bad roads. In Quebec the authorities succeed in having all pitch poles on public roads removed, Ontario should not be behind Quebec in these matters.

The weather continues to keep up its reputation for severity and in future years the winter of 1888 will be looked back as one of the old-fashioned kind. On Friday morning last the mercury sank to 22° below zero. On Tuesday the January thaw was supposed to have arrived, there being some rain, but the wind soon veered to the north, yesterday morning the thermometer indicated 19° below zero.

The Mechanics' Institute Concert next Tuesday evening. Tickets 25 cts.

The annual meeting of the Reform Association of East Hastings and the Carleton Place on Tuesday. The usual business was transacted, old officers re-elected, and the places in the riding. Mr. S. B. Butler, M.P., though in ill health delivered a short address which was well received. Votes of thanks were tendered to Mr. Butler and the officers of the Association for their valuable services in the Reform interest.

The Institute Concert in the White Church will be a programme which bids fair to exceed any other in the line of public amusement offered in Deseronto this season. Convinced the worthiness of the object to which the proceeds are to be devoted, viz. the purchase of books for the library, and remembering the great display of talent which is to take part, we trust the people of Deseronto will show their appreciation of the effort that has been made to provide a really useful and enjoyable, by turning out in great numbers and filling the White Church.

During the progress of a recent social party an effort was made by some local lads to carry off the good things in the larder. A ladder was secured and an entrance attempted from the outside, but, alas! the window was nailed down. When the chief had got in, he was the party who carried off the hickory nuts!

Bo in your seats early next Tuesday evening. Do not annoy the audience by coming in late.

On Sunday Mrs. Taylor, of Gananoque, mother of Mr. George Taylor, M. P., committed suicide with a carving knife, while temporarily insane. The deed was committed in a barn in the rear of her residence, while the family were at church. She was seventy years of age, and since the demise of her husband her mind has been affected.

Operations are proceeding briskly in the Deseronto shipyard this winter, and Sept. Evans has, as usual, his hands full. The Reliance is covering new decks, rail, etc., and is being generally overhauled. Both the Resolute and Reliance have had their top sides repainted. The engines of the Cilola are now being rapidly put into place.

The columns have been erected and cylinders and all pumps are about to be lowered into place. The old quarters have been finished as far as the joiner work is concerned and they are now in the painters' hands. The shipyard is very busy.

When the machinery is lowered into the hold, other joiner work will be pushed on as rapidly as possible. Under the able supervision of Capt. Anderson and staff all the Reliance Company's vessels have been thoroughly brined and painted.

Port Puritan into a lake tow-barge to run as a consort of the Resolute. He has also been refitting the rigging of the Cilola and is attending to the rigging of the other vessels as well as the whole wire cable system of the Reliance Company. SPRING

CAMPAIGN!

It will not be many weeks before you will be buying what we call

SPRING GOODS!

We are going to tell you about our large importations, so that you may not make your purchases before making an inspection of our goods. Remember that at any time we will consider it a pleasure to show you our goods, and will assure you of courteous, obliging treatment.

IN DRESS GOODS

As usual we are prepared to lead the trade. This is one of our most important departments, and one which receives a large amount of care and attention. Importing direct from the old world, we are in a position to give our customers the benefit of the middle-man's profit, and we are also in a position to give them a class of goods which cannot be procured from other houses. In dress trimmings we have some especially fine goods. If you buy a Dress from us you may rest assured that you will be able to get a full line of Dress Trimming to match. Miss ALBION still presides over the manufacturing department and guarantees satisfaction in each and every case.

EMBROIDERIES AND LACE

Articles for every day use. We have some beautiful goods at beautifully low prices. Some people say such and such goods are so low they will likely take the place of Prints. It is not so. As long as manufacturers are disposed to manufacture the people will buy Prints.

We have secured a nice lot of these goods in many cases at a bargain, and are determined to give you the benefit. Don't wait till your neighbor gets all the choicest patterns. Every careful housewife studies the qualities and prices of St.ooms and Cottons. We think we can do better by you in these lines than any one else. You can't tell unless you examine them. We have the goods here now, you do your part and come and examine them before you buy.

IN SHIRTINGS

Our stock is equal to the wants of any one, we care not who they are. We can give you Shirtings as low as 6c. per yard, but we do not guarantee these goods. At 10c, 11c, 12c, 14c, and 15c. we have some lovely goods in which we can guarantee the color and material. Cottonades and Ducks should come in for a fair share of attention. We are proud of our Staple Department all the way through. It should be an interesting stop for purchasers during the coming season.

A good part of our Spring Goods are piled on our counters. For what reason? Because we have not room for them on our shelves. The winter season is not past yet, and we have a lot of winter goods which must be sold in a short time. We will not ask you to allow us a profit. Simply give us what the goods cost and you can have them. In many cases you can have them for less than cost. We have only a little of that can now flannel at 18c. left, but you can have it at 17c. A line of medium weight shirts and drawers which were $1.50 now 95c. All wool shirts which were 65c. now 50c.

SPECIAL LINES.

We always have some specially attractive lines of goods that are not to be had elsewhere at the prices.

LINE NO. 1.

which we have just opened is a lot of Bleached and Cream Table Linens, hand loom woven goods, without dressing, at very low prices. If you want good wearing Table Linen always buy the Cream, loom finish.

LOT NO. 2.

Is a grand lot of nearly 3,000 yards of Print, to be sold at 10 cents, same as usually sold at 12 1/2 cents.

LOT NO. 3.

Is a lot of Ladies' and Children's Cotton Hosiery, black and colored, at prices never before heard of, from 5 cents a pair.

LOT NO. 4.

Is a big quantity of Shirtings, Gingham, etc., at lower prices than elsewhere.

LOT NO. 5.

Is a lot of Hickory Cottonades, the best wearing goods in the market, at 5 cts a yard less than regular price.

LOT NO. 6.

Is a lot of Grey and White Cottons, at less prices for quality than can be had elsewhere.

We make these statements because we know these goods were bought out of the usual way, and much less than regular prices, and that these bargains were confined to ourselves in this section.

A lot of new Tweeds are now out, and they are splendid value. We have opened out our new Embroideries in narrow widths, and medium width, as well as Allovers, Flouncing and Skirting widths, and in both Swiss and Cambrie muslins.

Our new Serges for Curtains are now in, as well as Laces to match them. Our new Oriental Laces are in.

Our new Tweeds, Linens and Towels are in.

We pride ourselves on the fact that our importations will excel and surpass in point of variety, quality and value anything ever shown here.

Still a few winter goods to be sold cheap.

TERRIBLE TRAGEDY.

About 4 p. m. on Tuesday the town was thrown into a state of great excitement by the receipt of a message from Napanee stating that Peter J. Shandrew of this place had shot his wife. The excitement was intensified by the arrival of the officers of the law in pursuit of the murderer, and subsequently wrought up to fever heat when it was learned that the desperate man had consumed the tragedy by taking his own life. The facts connected with this affair, are, as far as we can learn, about as follows:—Jonathan, or as the name is generally spelled here, Shandrew, who would have been 22 years of age in August, was married in May last to Luella, daughter of Mr. Chas. McCullough, of Napanee, her age being about 20 years. For a time they lived together, it is said, quite happily, but of late their married life for various reasons became anything but pleasant. About three weeks ago they removed to Napanee where the husband was engaged at work on the new to go house and settle the matter at some other time. He consented to do so and went to his father's house. He evidently brooded over the matter, though not saying very much about it, but it was noticed that he was labouring under intense mental excitement. On Tuesday morning he had decided either to bring back his wife or failing that to end their disputes by taking her life and his own. In the morning he borrowed a 32 calibre Remington five shooter from a young man named Jones alleging that he wished to kill a dog, and purchased a box of cartridge at the Big Store. After dinner he told his mother on going out to tell his father that it was not home by 6:30 p. m. he would come home a corpse, a foolish and idle threat as she considered at the time. He then endeavored to get a girl at Manigan's livery, but Mr. Manigan could not just then oblige him. He came back a little after and taking the hostler aside confidentially showed him his revolver and told him he intended to shoot his wife and kill himself. This as before was considered as an idle threat. He then started to walk to Napanee. On the way he shot a dog belonging to Jas. Hearn on the Napanee road. The stage overtaking him he took passage in it, and reaching Napanee he got out at this end of the town and proceeded directly to his father-in-law's residence near the station. He inquired for Mr. McCullough, but found he was not in. He then walked inside, where there were only his wife, her fourteen year old sister and a young man named Lasher. He addressed his wife saying, "Luella, you must come home and live with me." She replied she would not. He then offered to get a house in Napanee and reside there if she would consent to live with him. She refused, saying that he had abused her long enough, that he had deceived her, and that she would live with her father. He then exclaimed "You must live with me, or we must part in death" and drawing the revolver fired a shot at his wife who was then just turning away from him. The bullet struck her in the left shoulder. She fell forward on her face, and he fired again, this time without striking her. Her sister implored him to desist when he turned as if to threaten her. He then fired another shot which also missed his victim. He then rushed from the house.

In a few minutes word was conveyed to the police who immediately started in pursuit of their man. A telegram was sent to Deseronto to Chief Gunyon asking him to intercept Shandrew who it was thought was on his way to Deseronto. The Chief immediately drove down as far as Mr. Aylsworth's and waited there. Chief Allen, of Napanee, Mr. Scott, of the Frederick, and others drove up the ice to Deseronto, but without seeing Shandrew. A consultation was held and it was agreed that Chief Gunyon should drive down the slash road, while Chief Allen should drive over the bay to the Fredericksburg side. The latter was informed when he got to the other side that Shandrew had a few minutes before shot himself through the heart and that his body was by the way side.

It appears that after shooting his wife Shandrew proceeded to the ice where he persuaded a man who was drawing hay from the marsh to give him a drive, urging him to drive fast as he had a "couple of bottles" which the boys in Napanee were wishing to get from him. He got off when the marsh was reached, and proceeded on foot or on foot along the ice. Peter Shandrew's house on the Fredericksburg side of the bay nearly opposite Deseronto. Mr. Shandrew was his uncle, and entering the house he informed Mrs. Shandrew that he had killed his wife and that he was now going to kill himself. He told her to look out of the window and see the crowd that were pursuing but they would not catch him alive. It seems the towns he saw on the ice were only those of farmers going home from market. Mrs. Shandrew, not thinking that he meant what he was saying, implored him not to talk in that way. He, however, continued to reiterate his intention of killing himself, and asked her to let his people know, and he would tell the Walmatney boys to go to the sand pit a little distance off and they would find his corpse which they were to carry to Deseronto. He went outside, fired a shot in the air, and then knelt down a few yards from the house and in a loud voice prayed his Maker to forgive him for the crime already perpetrated and for the terrible deed he was about to commit. To Nicholas Gault who was passing he made the request that he would carry his body to Deseronto. Gault drove on a little distance from the now innately desperate man. Shandrew placed the revolver against his breast and sent a bullet through his heart, expiring immediately, about 5:30 p. m.

Thus ended the fearful tragedy of the day. The body was shortly afterwards conveyed to Deseronto. In the meantime medical assistance was summoned for the injured woman. It was for some time thought that she would not recover from the effects of the wound, but yesterday she was much easier, and it is now thought that she is out of danger and her speedy recovery is expected. The event naturally made a great commotion in Napanee, Deseronto and vicinity where all the parties are well known. Much sympathy is felt for the parents and families of the unhappy victims of the shocking tragedy.

REMEMBER THE FAMILY ANNI-VERSARIES.

As a people, we pay far too little attention to birthdays and other family anniversaries. Too much cannot be done to make home attractive, so that our boys and girls will prefer to be at other places. "This has been the nicest day I ever knew," said a boy to his mother one evening. "The birds have all been singing, and the sun shone every minute, and everything has been so lovely just for your birthday, mamma, and I'm so glad," and he emphasized his gladness with a hearty hug and kiss. For weeks the boy had been looking forward to this day, planning and making a little birthday gift as a surprise, and when the time came, his whole mind was given to making his mother happy. "But it's so much trouble to celebrate birthdays," he complained. "And in large families they come so often." Yes, it is some trouble; but how can we keep our children contented and happy at home without taking trouble? And no mother regrets the trouble when she sees her children regarding their home as the very best place in the whole world. Try to celebrate the birthdays one year, and see if it does not "pay," in the enjoyment of the whole family. Let no one be forgotten from father to baby, and try to have each one interested in all the others, planning, if possible, some little birthday gift. No matter how simple or trifling it may be, the love and thoughtfulness which go with it will make it precious. —American Agriculturist for March.

FRIDAY, FEB. 24, 1888.

GREEN POINT.

From Our Own Correspondent.

Mr. Alfred Carlie, who has been prospecting in the western States for the last six months, has returned, bringing with him a young wife he obtained, "Anna" will never leave this the most beautiful spot on earth! He arrived here on Sunday.

Mrs. William Shortt, who has been a great sufferer for a long time, died on Sunday. We have not learned where the funeral will take place.

Mr. & Mrs. O. Burlington and Mr. & Mrs. B. Johnson, of Pictou, were the guests of Mr. A. Vandusen, Saturday night and Sunday. Mr. & Mrs. Frank Terwilliger, of Pictou, are also the guests of Mr. Vanusen. The family of Mrs. Hutton who were all down with the measles are recovering.

Mrs. George Rowe is quite ill, the doctor being in attendance.

Mr. Jay Reynolds and family are talking of going to Dakota.

MARYSVILLE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

Mr. F. McBurn has gone to Ottawa to resume his position as sessional clerk during the coming session of parliament.

Mr. Theo. Trimble, wife, and Mr. R. Trimble and wife, of Nanapan, spent Sunday afternoon last at the home of Mr. J. Martin.

The local fancier, Mr. Martin, made a splendid showing at the O. F. show at Ottawa last week. He took seven lots: two 2nd, two 2nd, and several 3rd prizes, and that among a collection of over six hundred of the best birds in Ontario and Quebec.

T. Stapleton has been appointed a local agent for the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association for this district, and will be glad to receive applications for membership and supply any information required. The principles of this Association have only to be understood to be appreciated. It is rapidly coming to the front, and is a reliable insurance, and is just suited for those whose means are limited, and who were deterred from insuring, by the high rates charged by old companies.

LIME LAKE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

Messrs. Kinet and Anderson have completed cutting and hauling fence rails and have taken their departure for Blon.

Mr. Demorey still continues to hang logs to the Rathbun Company's mill.

Mr. Nathan Dunn is busy with a gang of men cutting and hauling sawwood logs, bought of Mr. Latimer and delivering same at the Rathbun Company's mill.

Mr. Benjamin's men returned from Yarker to cut the iron wood on Mr. Wells' place. They again take their departure for Yarker to-morrow.

The Rathbun Company mill is running steady and the lumber is being delivered in Timworth.

Your correspondent was surprised to see a team of mules with 1500 ft. of lumber on the road to Timworth and which was delivered there, as I was told that 800 ft. was all a team could take through.

Mr. Latimer's mill is closed down and the single machine taken out. The circular saw is still there.

Mr. E. Williams bound not to be outdone by a team of mules loaded 1300 ft. of lumber and delivered same at Timworth. Next.

TYNDINAGA RESERVE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

Our Barber who resides at the west end of the Reserve viewed the moon's eclipse the other evening through a piece of smoked glass and decided that it was elegant.

The long talk of marriage of Mrs. Emma Poyles to the son of her brother, William Simmon, was consummated on Tuesday evening last at the Mohawk Parsonage.

Mrs. Anderson, of the Mohawk Parsonage, is still confined to her bed.

At a meeting of the Directors of our farm organization on the 16th inst. it was decided to call it the Bay of Quinte Mohawk Agricultural Society. The next year the annual fair will be held on the 15th inst. and a general meeting for that and other purposes has been convened for the 25th inst.

Persons from the rear of the Township are delivering cedar posts for fencing purposes at various points on the Reserve.

The Reverend Mr. Forneri of Adolphus-town, preached at St. John's Church on Sunday afternoon last; his sermon was appropriate and much appreciated. It is seldom that our little church has three clergymen officiating at one service, for besides the Rev. Mr. Forneri and the incumbent the Rev. A. L. Green assisted.

MILLTOWN.

From Our Own Correspondent.

Some writers speak of the millennium being close at hand; it can be so for the evil one seems to have full possession yet. Last Saturday night some miscreant tried to burn the driving house belonging to F. D. Appleby. They had built a fire on one of the stalls but luckily the fire died out without doing any damage.

Mr. J. D. Appleby has gone to New York. If he is suited with the place he is missed very much by his family; he is missed very much by his family; he is missed very much by his family.

Mr. John Reid has gone to Prince Edward to carry on butchering; news is abroad of an early marriage.

Mrs. William Rowe was taken suddenly ill last week. Dr. McLaren was called in and under his treatment, we are glad to say, she is fast recovering.

Mrs. Sara McCruiden, of Belleville, has been visiting her friend, DeMotte Appleby, David Huxley and family, from Odessa.

Mr. Pennick and his daughter spent a few days with friends in Gonsenac.

Mr. Johnston, the School Inspector, visited our school last week. He seemed well pleased with the progress of the school in general.

READ.

From Our Own Correspondent.

"Animal Doctor" feels much obliged to his many friends in Marysville, who take so great an interest in his affairs. He here to inform them that he always noddles a own canoe and intends to do so in future even if he should disturb their equanimity. We had hoped to chronicle some interesting event but it appears that they are relegated to the far distant future.

Mrs. Walsh has been visiting her daughter Mrs. Kegan, of Belleville, Ont.

Mrs. Egan mother of Mr. Patrick Egan and John Egan retired to bed on Monday evening 17th inst. in her usual health and was found dead in her bed the next morning. The deceased lady was a native of the County of Kerry, Ireland, and was well known through this section of Country. She was 73 years of age and at the time of her death was on a visit with her son John. The funeral took place on the 16th inst. at St. Charles' Cemetery.

We think Mr. James K. Walsh of Oshkosh, Wis., who is now in the Territory, for papers received. We are glad to learn that Mr. & Mrs. Walsh are comfortably settled and enjoy their Western Home.

Mr. James Walsh who is sojourning in Dakota, likes the country very much. We would not be surprised if the Far West robbed us again of some of our stalwart youth.

The Tribune as usual is a welcome visitor in many a home in the far west and reads news and other local news anxiously looked for every week.

There is rather a dearth of news at present and we find it rather a difficult matter sometimes to make up our usual correspondence.

A court-martial is about being held by the Mulligan Guards on one of their officers the result of which we shall duly notice.

KINGSFORD.

From Our Own Correspondent.

Mr. & Mrs. W. N. Whitman returned home by the noon train on Saturday from their wedding tour.

Mrs. M. McKee, of Deseronto, was visiting Mrs. Ralph Abbott last Sunday.

Mrs. L. Lyman, of Marysville, was visiting here this week.

Mr. Daniel Gleason, of Nanapan, was visiting his friends here last Sunday.

Mrs. Alice Elzberger, of Pictou, is visiting her old friends here.

Mr. & Mrs. Adams, of Deseronto, were visiting Mrs. James Hulse last Sunday.

Mr. Michael Donovan and Mr. John Donovan, of Bradford, Penn., have come home to visit their mother, who has been ill for some time and is very low.

Leaving a commutation there is a cessation of all kinds of gaiety.

A party of boys is expected at the Marchioness Hotel, Belleville, about the first of March and a number of girls in May. Some of these will be for adoption by those who have no little ones, and some to make a home cheerful, while others will be offered and able to help with the chores and go to school in winter. Applications are now being received by Mr. A. H. Brough-Walace, at the home, Belleville.

The text of the Fishery Treaty has been made public. While not everything that could be expected, it is considered a fair settlement of the vexed questions in dispute. Canada has, of course, made concessions, but on the whole they are not of such a serious nature as were anticipated. We believe that the treaty will be ratified by the Senate of the United States and the British and Canadian Parliaments.

The aim of The Big Store has been and continues to be, that of selling the wares of the good opinion of consumers and to scrupulously maintain the high standard of excellence in their brands. That they have succeeded in their efforts has long been a foregone conclusion, as evidenced by the enormous demand for their tea throughout this and the surrounding counties. It is manifestly to the advantage of every purchaser to buy such goods as are already firmly established as favorites by consumers, and the tea kept by this house are demanded by reason of their well known and attested qualities.

There was considerable discussion at the last Council in reference to the petitions for or against the proposed law in reference to liquor licenses. The number of names on the petition for the by-law was 243; on that against 299. Councillor Cameron maintained that 27 names should be removed from the former inasmuch as they had also signed the latter petition or their names had been obtained by false representation. In addition to these he contended that 35 names should be struck off as they were not entitled to vote at municipal elections, and that thus the majority of votes were against the proposed by-law. Councillor Richardson, on the other hand, held that if the 27 names were removed from the one petition they should also be removed from the other, and he further asserted that there were a great many names of persons on the second petition who were not entitled to vote in municipal elections, and that thus he had still a decided majority.

An annual meeting of the Central Farmers Institute was held at Toronto on Tuesday. It is unnecessary to state that Hastings—also, enjoying old Hastings—was not present.

Hamilton of McCallough's Block, who has been making the winter of Deseronto's discontent less gloomy by selling goods at low prices, is now taking up again for spring trade. Read his advertisement.

Mr. W. J. Malley, druggist, St. George street, calls the attention of the readers of The Tribune to the excellence of his drugs and medicines. Prescriptions quickly and accurately compounded. A large assortment of fancy goods, stationery, etc., always kept in stock.

Mr. J. A. Craig, having passed a very successful examination, graduates to-day from the Philadelphia College of Dental Surgery. His many friends in Deseronto and vicinity will be glad to hear of his success and will unite with THE TRIBUNE in wishing him a successful career in his chosen profession.

A time of activity prevails at present at the Chemical Works, and there is every indication of a very busy season ahead. The mammoth new charcoal kiln is about completed, the new building having progressed their work even in the most severe weather.

A large number of new stoves, vats and retorts have been recently put in. It is satisfactory to know that orders for the numerous products of these works are coming in on an extensive scale.

Robert Atkinson is making considerable money in his new parish and his work is evidently appreciated by his people. The recent concert at North Hastings and Milford realized $119, including tickets sold on a sack of crazy work. Of this sum a present of $20 was donated to Mr. Atkinson for the purchase of a new lot. The balance will be devoted to the erection of a suitable fence to be placed around the beautiful church of St. John's, Marysburg.

The Canadian Pacific Railway exhibition car arrived here on Monday morning and remained at the railway station until 5 p.m. Although the weather was unfavorable, the car was visited by large numbers of citizens and farmers who seemed to manifest great interest in the display of vegetable and mineral products of the great western territories of the Dominion. Already an increased desire for information concerning British Columbia and the territories is observable among all classes.

Happier addresses, better singing, more sprightly music, and the best of chairman were the distinguishing features of Mr. Douglas' Social Last Friday evening. The audience were in good humor from the very start and none regretted being present at the meeting and music.

Mr. W. D. McKee very capably presided, and with Rev. J. J. Craig, and a TRIBUTE representative delivered good addresses. Miss Bellwick contributed several musical selections and vocal solos which were very appreciated. Miss Sophie Anderson sang very sweetly, and Mr. G. W. Wright, who was in good form, gave a solo with capital effect. Wm. Geddis contributed an excellent song, and with Principal Cole sang a duet. Mr. & Mrs. M. D. Campbell, who are visiting in Deseronto, gave valuable assistance. Miss Campbell giving a vocal solo in her usual good style, while an organ and violin selecting by both Mr. & Mrs. Campbell was especially worthy of praise.

Principal Cole presided over the audience with his recitation. Mrs. Douglas also addressed the meeting, thanking all for their presence and assistance. The programme was extemporized during the evening and THE TRIBUNE must admit it was in every respect superior to what is generally presented at a social and concert, the singing and music being particularly good.

The people of Green Point, Sophiasburg, are denouncing most postcard associations. At present they have only a mail once a week and that on Saturdays. It is too bad that this community should be treated in this manner, more especially as the expense of giving them a mail two or three times a week would be very trifling. The people of Greenpoint should urge their case by petition or otherwise.

In the matter of the new law representing distress for rent, it ought to be explained that, although the act is not yet in force, it is not a new law, but a new tenancy created before it came in force. The tenant now living in a house the contract for the tenancy of which was made previous to the first of October, 1887, is liable under the old law, and if he desires to have the advantage of the new law he must make a new contract.

On Tuesday evening a large and respectable audience assembled to enjoy the Mechanics' Institute Concert. The committee secured all the best local talent for the occasion. Mr. E. W. Rathbun filled the chair and gave the opening address.

Vocal solos were rendered by Mrs. Hillman, who made her first appearance before a Deseronto audience, and who elicited applause for both her selections, and by Mrs. M. D. Campbell, Fowles and J. Walker. Messrs. Fowles and John Walker, sang "The Old Brigade" and a quartette by Miss Walker, Missie, Fowles and J. Walker, were also well received. Mrs. Hillman's selections on the piano were well executed. Mr. Cole gave an excellent reading of a poem, and brought down the house by his brief speech.

OBITUARY.

Dr. Stewart, who has been in poor health for some weeks, passed quietly away at his residence, about ten o'clock Saturday night.

Dr. Wm. of Perth, and Dr. Campbell of Belleville, were universally respected by all.

He was the oldest member of the Medical profession in the district, and was the last surviving member of the Stewart family at one time living in Brockville.

Deceased was in his eighty-third year. He was born in Ireland and came to Canada with his parents in 1823, settling near Brockville. He studied medicine with the late Dr. Wilson, of Perth, and completed his course in Glasgow, Scotland. He first began to practise in Brockville, but after wards removed to Deseronto, where he finally retired from active duties with a handsome fortune. He has resided in Belleville since. His wife was a Miss Manning, of Perth, and died in 1870, in the grave several years ago. The late Dr. Stewart had three children—Mrs John Bell, Mr. George Stewart, and the late Mrs. Alex. Robertson—Belleville Ontario.

HEROIC CONDUCT.

From the Leigh Lancashire Times, published at Leigh, Lancashire Eng., we clip the following extract which will be of interest to many of our readers.

Mr. Thompson, one of the heroes referred to, was for a time a resident of Deseronto, being during his stay connected with the choir, and also temporary organist of St. Mark's Church. "The rescue from drowning at Westleigh on Monday was an exceptionally brave and exciting character. The little boy William Pimblett, whilst sliding broke the ice of the dissolved mill lodge, and was in imminent danger of drowning."

William Pimblett's mother and sister, and a collar named Henshaw, hastened to his assistance. Then came a scene which might have ended in a double or even a treble misfortune and the loss, as at Burnley recently, of several lives. Henshaw instantly stepped up and went to the aid of the rescue.

Susannah Pimblett, aged 12, indiscreetly followed him on the ice. It broke under her, and with great presence of mind, Henshaw, perceiving that the girl's brother seemed able to hold a little longer, turned his intention to his sister. This tragic scene was being enacted in the presence of the children's mother, who abandoned the hope of saving either. Then, fortunately, other assistance arrived. At Henshaw's bidding, a ladder was procured, but was several yards too short. John W. Thompson, who was accompanied by his father, Mr. W. Thompson, ironfounder, then, with a rope tied round his waist, ventured on the ice, and put a clothes prop under little Pimblett, who was now getting nearly exhausted, and a rope being fastened to the ladder, was pulled on the ice and rescued. Henshaw and the girl had yet to be saved. Young Thompson again gallantly ventured on the ice, pushing the ladder until Henshaw could hold on by it.

it. Henshaw then broke the ice before and with, of course, Thompson's splendid services, to land in safety, though much exhausted, bringing with him the girl like a sack, and, to Henshaw's great commendation and bravery the girl owes her life. J. W. Thompson's share in saving Henshaw and the boy, indeed all three, is no less commendable. Their splendid bravery deserves public recognition. We have reported the case to Captain Home of the Royal Humane Society, and meanwhile if any subscriptions be entrusted to us towards a testimonial to Henshaw and Thompson, we shall be glad to acknowledge them in the Journal. Henshaw has previously figured in several life-saving exploits.

VILLAGE COUNCIL.

Town Hall, Feb. 29th, 1888.

A meeting of the Village Council was held on the above date. Present, W. E. Aylsworth, Reeve, and Messrs Baker, Cameron, Finch and Richardson, Councillors. The minutes of the last meeting were read and, a few amendments being made, were approved.

Several communications were read and tabled.

A petition was presented from E. W. Rathbun and 60 others praying that the Council would grant some financial assistance to the Mechanics Institute. A petition from Geo. Field and Murray Deans and 73 others read praying the council to limit the number of tavern licenses to four. Also a counter petition signed by Dalton and 299 others praying that the number remain unchanged.

Moved by Mr. Cameron, seconded by Mr. Roach, that in terms of a communication received from Bradford City Council, a petition be signed by the Reeve and Clerk praying that the Legislative Assembly repeal the law enabling municipalities to grant bonuses to manufacturers. Carried.

Moved by Mr. Richardson, seconded by Mr. Baker, that the Auditors' Report be received and adopted and that the Clerk be empowered to have 200 copies of the abstract and statement of accounts printed for distribution.

Moved by Mr. Roach, seconded by Mr. Baker, that the offer of Deseronto Gas Works for lighting the streets at $20 per lamp for one year, be accepted; and that the Council do authorize a committee to locate the lamps in such places as may be suitable for the public. Carried.

Councillor Richardson asked for permission to withdraw the by-law introduced by him at the former meeting. Permission was granted on a division.

Councillor Richardson then introduced a by-law to limit the number of tavern licenses to four, and abolish all shop licenses, by-law to come into effect immediately. Carried.

Moved by Mr. Richardson, seconded by Mr. Cameron, that a grant of $25 be made to Deseronto Mechanics' Institute. Carried.

Moved by Mr. Roach, seconded by Mr. Baker, that the Rathbun Company Band be permitted to use the town hall free of charge on Tuesday and Friday evenings. Carried.

The Reeve introduced a by-law for the appointment of high school trustees for Deseronto. Moved by Mr. Cameron, seconded by Mr. Richardson, that A. S. Vallee, H. B. Rathbun and T. Roach, Jr., be appointed said trustees. Carried.

The by-law was then read, signed, sealed and numbered 126.

Accounts amounting to $18.75 for relief furnished to destitute persons were then ordered to be paid, and committee appointed to investigate cases of all persons seeking assistance.

Fishery Treaty.

There seems at present to be no prospect of an immediate publication of the Fishery Treaty but in the meantime it will not be policy for us to let our new goods remain unpublished. They are just what you want and it is important that you should hear about them.

Carpet Department.

If a new, bright, well selected and cheap lot of goods is any improvement to a Department then, our Carpet Department is much improved. During the coming season we intend this department shall not be among the least important or the least interesting to customers. In Brussels we have an especially large assortment in very handsome patterns and the prices are from 10% to 20% less than last season. We know you cannot help being pleased with them when you see them. In Tapestry, wool, Union and Hemp, we have also a large stock. In this department you will find Lace Curtains, Scrims, linoleums and oilcloth materials. New goods, best quality, cheap price is the order here.

Staple Department.

It will not do for you to forget our Staple Department particularly at this season of the year when you are buying Cottons quite largely. You are all aware of the fact that the prices of Cottons have been advanced by the manufacturers and consequently by their agents, the wholesalers. It is our custom to buy cottons in large quantities and in this case it is very fortunate that our large order was placed before the rise. We are in a position to give our customers the benefit of cheap cottons. Remember that none of our Cottons are less than 36 inches wide. The prices are 4c, 5c, 6c, 7c, 8c, 9c, 10c per yd. Price is not the only thing. Cottons might be cheap in price only. Examine the quality closely when buying. In Shirts we show a stock of goods which are second to none in the market. We have the makes of all the best mills in the Dominion and mostly all warranted fast colors. Shirts at 6c, 7c, 8c, 10c, 12c, 14c, 16c.

Winter Goods.

Don't forget when you are buying Winter Goods that you can buy them from us at the prices they cost us or less. No profit in the word.
